Martin F. Tupper to the South. The Charleston News and Courier published the following poem from the pen | who did this still remains unpunish of Martin F. Tupper, who is now in ed! It is too much!"

To the South. The world has misjudged, mistrusted, maligned you,
And should be quick to make honest amends!
Let us, then, speak of you just as we find you,
Humbly and heartly, cousins and friends!

Let us remember your wrongs and your trials, Slandered and plundered, and crushed to the Draining adversity's bitterest vials,
Patient in courage and strong in good trust.

You fought for Liberty-rather than Slavery! Well might you wish to be quit of that ill.
But you were sold to political knavery,
Mesh'd by diplomacy's spider-like skill;
And you regioed to see slavery banished,
While the free servant works well as before;

Confident, though many fortunes have vanished, Soon to recover all—rich as of yore!

Doubtless there had been some hardships and cru-Cases exception, svil and rars,
But to tell truth—and truly the jewel 'tis—
Kindness ruled—as a rule—everywhere!
Servants—if slaves—were your wealth and inheri-

Born with your children and grown on your ground,
And it was quite as much Int'rest as merit bence
Still to make friends of dependents all round

Yes, it is slander to say you oppress'd them.
Does a man squamier the prize of his pelf!
Was it not often that he who possess'd them
Eather was owned by his servants himself!
Oaring for all, as in health, so in sickness,
He was their father, their patriarch chief,
Age's infirmities, infancy's weakness,
Leaning on him for repose and relief.

When you went forth in your pluck and bravery, Selling for freedom both fortunes and lives,
Where was that prophesied outburst of slavers,
Wreaking revenge on your children and wives?
Nowhere! You left all to servile safe keeping,
And this was faithful and true to your trust;
Master and servant thus mutually reaping
Double reward of the good and the just!

Generous Southerners! I who addressed you Shared with too many belief in your sins;
But I recall it—thus—let me confess you—
Knowledge is victor and everywhere wins;
For I have seen, I have heard, and am sure of it,
You have been slandered and saffered long.
Parting all slavery good and the cure of it. Paying all slavery's cost, and the cure of it, And the Great World shall repent of its wrong !

Constant Thoughts.

Are drawn around my view ; I sit alone in intense delight, And sweetly think of you. I think what a being you are, With a heart so light and free;

With a soul like some evening star, That shines sometimes on me. Yes I, if it 'twere mine to say.
What your future lot should be ; That bliss should ever guide your way Throughout all eternity. No sombre cares should impress thy mind,

In wakefulness or sleep; But joy should be to thee confined; Just such as angels reap. A new starry crown you should wear, And golden slippers too; Thy jewels should be rich and rare, As could be found in Peru.

Thy path should be with flowers strewn, All racy, rare and sweet;
The angels should with thee commune,
And make thy joy complete.

But alas! how faint the power of man.

To do his yearning will; And the temptation to withstand, That do his bosom thrill. For life is but a vacant dream,
O'er spread with my sterious veil;
And to me it does visibly seem,
That all man's hopes are frail.
